by prey to predator scents, and explains, paradoxically, how the same individual predator scent can be interpreted as either safe or dangerous to a prey animal depending on how, when and where the cue was deposited.

Biologically meaningful scents: a framework for

The world around us is full of intriguing and beautiful scents. In sensory terms, we humans tend to be dominated by vision, and this often leads many of us to a lower appreciation of our odorous environment than it deserves. Not so with Roman Kaiser. He has devoted his working life to tracking down
